Process of Management in Susinidu Industry

Susinidu Industry was consisted of six departments namely Production, Quality Control, Marketing, Human Resource Management, Finance and Supplies and each department was headed by a manager serving under the direction of General Manager. The chairman of the Industry was functioning as the Head of the institution and the Board of Directors. There were three products manufactured by the organization and the tasks of each products were handled by the Production Department.

Employees of the organization got the instructions regarding performance of their duties directly from the respective manager. However there were certain situations where employees used to get instructions with regard to performing their jobs from a manager attached to a different department. The manager handling the function of Quality Control used to give instructions to employees attached to Human Resource Management Department concerning disciplinary matters of his employees although this subject was under the control of Human Resource manager. Similarly there were situations where Financial Manager, Supplies Manager or Production Manager used to give directions to the employees attached to other departments when such managers had some interest on a particular subject matter. The only problem arisen in this regard was that when the General manager took up a subject matter of such nature the manager in charge of that subject was not aware of it and he had to get a clarification from the manager who gave instructions on a particular aspect. Nevertheless this practice did not influence the effective functioning of management process of the organization.

The chairman had a system of getting a feedback on the performance of employees through grapevines and it was observed that most of the decisions taken for improving performance based on the information received through grapevines were successful.

The organization did not take any interest to monitor information relevant to the similar products manufactured by other organizations and the services provided by such manufacturers since there was no problem with regard to marketing, quality of products or any other functional areas of the organization. Nevertheless the Chairman had a system of receiving information through customers' complain and it was effectively used for improving quality of products and sales.

The organization earned a high level of profits compared to other business firms producing similar products available in the market. There were no specific targets set for production or sales and the Board of Directors were always satisfied with the profits earned by the organization.

Having reviewed the progress made so far by the organization the Board of Directors at its last meeting decided to appoint a management consultant to study the status quo of the organization, and to get a report on the process of management operating in the organization at present and also to seek his recommendations for continuation of the same process in the future as well.

Answer the following two questions assuming that you have been appointed as the management consultant and all the facts stated above have been undoubtedly revealed to you.

(a) Explain the management problems existing in the above organization and the solutions you recommend for solving them stating very clearly the principles of management relevant to each aspect of the problems and recommended solutions.
